Appendix D-3. Impairment Cause to Pollutant Parameter Crosswalk

Algal Growth

High nutrient loads cause algal growth, particularly from nitrogen and phosphorus. Excessive algal growth can lead to low dissolved oxygen levels, odors, and a poor habitat for aquatic life (Gibbons, 1994). EPA linked the algal growth impairment category with the DMR parameter codes for nitrogen and phosphorus, shown in Table 1.

Ammonia

Elevated levels of ammonia in a receiving stream can result in oxygen depletion from nitrification. This can lead to excessive growth of plants in a stream. Additionally, ammonia present in the un-ionized form is toxic to aquatic organisms (Chapra, 1997). Table 2 provides the DMR parameters for ammonia linked to the ammonia impairment category.

Biotoxins

Some plants and animals naturally produce Biotoxins. They can be poisonous to humans and other plants and animals. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention lists the following ten primary biotoxins (CDC, 2011):

- Abrin;
- Brevetoxin;
- Colchicine;
- Digitalis;
- Nicotine;
- Ricin;
- Saxitoxin;
- Strychnine;
- Tetrodotoxin; and
- Trichothecene.

Only one of these biotoxin compounds had a DMR parameter code, presented in Table 3.

Table 3. Biotoxins Parameter Groups

PRAM Code	Parameter Description	Pollutant Code
00178	Nicotine Sulfate	10427

Chlorine

Chlorine is a disinfectant commonly used at wastewater and drinking water treatment plants. When chlorine levels are greater than 0.01 mg/L it can be toxic to fish and aquatic life (Hach, 2006). Error! Reference source not found. provides the DMR parameters for chlorine linked to the chlorine impairment category.

Dioxins

Dioxin compounds are exceptionally toxic to most organisms and can accumulate in aquatic life. When discharged to a stream, the compounds typically adhere to sediments in the water (Green Media, 2005). There are seventeen dioxin congeners which correspond to various DMR parameter codes. Table 5 provides the DMR parameters for dioxin compounds linked to the dioxin impairment category.

Flow Alterations

Altering the flow of water through a stream can have significant impacts on the surrounding ecosystem and aquatic life. It may impair the water to the point that the ecosystem can no longer support native species (Green Media, 2005). Table 6 provides the DMR parameters for flow linked to the flow alterations impairment category. The linking of these parameters occurred because the parameter description and pollutant code include flow.

Mercury

Mercury can be naturally occurring or released from human activities. Sources of mercury include industrial emissions, dental offices, and natural weathering of the earth's crust. When consumed by animals and humans, mercury is toxic (Green Media, 2005). Table 7 provides the DMR parameters for mercury linked to the mercury impairment category.

Metals

Most metals are naturally occurring; however industrial processes can significantly contribute to the amount of metals naturally present in receiving streams. Higher than normal levels of metals can be toxic to the aquatic ecosystem of a stream and decrease the usability of the stream for domestic uses (Chapra, 1997; Green Media, 2005). Table 8 presents the DMR parameters for metals linked to the metals impairment category. All metals in their elemental form are included in this category.

Nutrients

The two most important nutrients in a stream ecosystem are nitrogen and phosphorus; both are critical to maintaining a healthy ecosystem. When larger than natural amounts of nitrogen and phosphorus enter a receiving stream, aquatic plant growth can dramatically increase. Excessive plant growth can lead to low oxygen levels and unpleasant odors (Green Media, 2005). Table 9 provides the DMR parameters for nitrogen and phosphorus linked to the nutrient impairment category. Linked to this category are all parameter descriptions and pollutant codes that include nitrogen or phosphorus.

Pathogens

Waterborne pathogens include bacteria, viruses, and protozoa. Elevated pathogen levels are primarily a concern for water used for human consumption and municipal sources. They can cause various diseases that grow and multiply within the host and can also enter the human body through skin contact or ingestion of contaminated water (Chapra, 1997). There are various types of bacteria used as indicators for high pathogen levels in waters. The most common include coliform, streptococci, and E.coli bacteria. Table 11 presents the DMR parameters for coliform, streptococci, and E.coli bacteria linked to the pathogens parameter category.

Pesticides

Pesticides are chemicals used to control insects on plants and crops. After land application, pesticides disperse into nearby streams causing the pesticide chemicals to contaminate the water. Some pesticide chemicals will bioaccumulate in fish and other aquatic organisms and can persist in the environment for many years. They can be toxic to aquatic life and humans. A few examples of common pesticides include alachlor, malathion, and chlordane (Green Media, 2005). Table 12 presents the DMR parameters for pesticides linked to the pesticides impairment category.

PCBs

Polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) are man-made chemical compounds that vary in level of toxicity. There are 209 individual chemical compounds, some being carcinogens. PCBs are especially concerning because they bioaccumulate in fish that live in contaminated waters, making the consumption of fish a major source of PCB exposure for humans. The manufacture of PCBs was banned in 1977 but exposure still occurs because of historical contamination (Green Media, 2005). Table 13 provides the DMR parameters for PCBs linked to the PCBs impairment category.

Radiation

High levels of radiation chemicals present in a receiving stream can be detrimental to aquatic and human life. The primary elements that contribute to radiation include radium and uranium (Green Media, 2005). Table 14 presents the DMR parameters for radiation linked to the radiation impairment category.

Table 54. Radiation Parameter Codes

Salinity/TDS/Chlorides/Sulfates

Salinity, total dissolved solids (TDS), chlorides, and sulfates can adversely affect receiving streams by rendering the water undrinkable or incapable of supporting aquatic life. Various sources discharge high pollutant levels such as industrial uses, agricultural runoff, or treated municipal sewage (Green Media, 2005). Table 15 provides the DMR parameters for salinity, TDS, chlorides, and sulfates linked to the salinity/TDS/chlorides/sulfates impairment category.

Sediment

Every stream experiences a natural sediment load. When the amount of sediment exceeds this natural level it becomes a pollutant. High sediment loads in streams can cause poor water quality. Sediments can also provide a surface for nutrients and toxic chemicals to attach to, clog fish gills, and decrease water clarity. Total suspended solids (TSS) or total solids typically indicate the amount of sediment in water (Green Media, 2005). Table 16 provides the DMR parameters for TSS and solids linked to the sediment impairment category. The linking of these parameters occurred because the parameter description and pollutant code include TSS or solids. All suspended or settleable solids are included in this category, but no pollutant specific solids (such as suspended copper) are incorporated.

Taste, Color, and Odor

Taste, color, and odor can all affect the water quality of a receiving stream. Various constituents, including toxic pollutants, can affect the taste, color, and odor of water in a stream. Table 17 provides the DMR parameters for taste, color, and odor linked to the taste, color, and odor impairment category. The linking of these parameters occurred because the parameter description and pollutant code include taste, color, or odor.

Temperature

Many variables can affect a stream's temperature including the depth of the water, the amount of shoreline vegetation, the time of year, and the temperature of the source water. Temperature variations can adversely affect aquatic organisms such as fish and algae. Additionally, temperature fluctuations in a stream can increase the undesirable effects of other impairment categories (Hach, 2006). There are two DMR parameter codes for temperature, listed in Table 18.

Table 18. Temperature Parameter Codes

PRAM Code	Parameter Description	Pollutant Code
00010	Temperature Degrees C	12383
00011	Temperature Degrees F	12384

Total Toxics

Toxic chemicals can adversely affect an aquatic ecosystem and have detrimental effects on humans and aquatic organisms (Green Media, 2005). EPA linked total toxics with EPA's list of priority pollutants because they are the set of pollutants that are regulated and for which analytical test methods have been developed. There are 126 priority pollutants, which have all been included in the total toxics impairment category (U.S. EPA, 2011).

EPA identified synonyms for the priority pollutants and included them in the parameter code list, however only pollutants that exactly matched the priority pollutant are included. For example, EPA included phenol, but not phenols and phenolic compounds. EPA linked 368 DMR parameter codes to the EPA priority pollutants.

Toxic Inorganics

Toxic inorganic chemicals are a subset of total toxic chemicals which can adversely affect an aquatic ecosystem. Table 19 presents the DMR parameter codes linked to the toxic inorganics impairment category.

Toxic Organics

Toxic organic chemicals are a subset of total toxic chemicals which can adversely affect an aquatic ecosystem. Typically, organic compounds do not readily break down in an aquatic ecosystem allowing them to accumulate and persist in the environment. Table 20 presents the DMR parameter codes linked to the total organics impairment category.

Turbidity

Turbidity refers to the cloudiness of the water. It depends on the amount of suspended material in the water. Silt, microorganisms, plant fibers, sawdust, wood ashes, or chemicals can cause high levels of suspended material. High amounts of suspended material can block light, reducing the amount of photosynthesis occurring and the amount of oxygen in the water. The reduction of the photosynthesis process and oxygen in the water can be harmful to aquatic life. Additionally, high turbidity levels can clog gills of fish which can lead to death, provide a place for harmful microorganisms to live, and make it harder for fish to hunt for food (Hach, 2006). TableTable 21 provides the DMR parameters for turbidity linked to the turbidity impairment category.

pH/Acidity/Caustic Conditions

pH levels range from zero to fourteen and determine the balance of hydrogen and hydroxide ions in water. Levels less than five indicate acidic conditions, levels greater than nine indicate alkaline conditions. When the water is acidic or alkaline, many biological processes are not able to occur, damaging the aquatic ecosystem (Green Media, 2005). Table 22 provides the DMR parameters for pH, acidity, and caustic conditions linked to the pH/acidity/caustic conditions impairment category.

Table 22. pH/Acidity/Caustic Conditions Parameter Codes

PRAM Code	Parameter Description	Pollutant Code
82583	pH, in soil	12528
61941	pH, maximum	12530
61942	pH, minimum	12531

00435	Acidity, total (as CaCO ₃)	10791

Organic Enrichment/Oxygen Depletion

A stream ecosystem must have adequate levels of dissolved oxygen in order to maintain a healthy population of aquatic life and high water quality level. When depletion of oxygen levels occurs, most aquatic organisms suffer. If dissolved oxygen levels are below 2 mg/L for a prolonged period of time, the stream can die. Oxygen levels fluctuate naturally within a stream ecosystem; however human activities can contribute large quantities of organic materials leading to a decline in oxygen levels (Green Media, 2005; Hach, 2006). As shown in Table 23, the organic enrichment impairment category includes all biochemical oxygen demand (BOD) and chemical oxygen demand (COD) pollutants.
